Greenwood and Ball, one of the oldest and longest established names in the Model Soldier World.

The extremely popular Lasset 54mm ranges go from strength to strength. These figures, the equal of any currently available, include among latest releases many exciting and intriguing figures.

Also in 54mm, but in a different vein, is the Sanderson range. These well-known figures are famous for their attention to detail and unmatched characterisation.

A newcomer in the form of cameo miniatures makes an appearance. The first items of an extensive range of superb quality and realism depict well-known historical figures.

The Garrison Wargame range, now remade in 25mm and well established include figures of many types covering the entire historical spectrum from modern to ancient. Perhaps best known for the superb ancients these wargame models bear very favourable comparison with any other range in this field. Having discontinued the Olive, Micro-Armour and Minot ranges from the present catalogue, it is hoped to add some new types at a later date. For up to date releases see the adverts in Military Modelling each month.

SANDERSON

54mm MINIATURES

It requires only a glance at one of the superbly designed figures in the Slave Market series to be instantly aware of the remarkable talent of the designer, Cliff Sanderson. His expertise is everywhere apparent, both in costume detail and in the manner in which he sculpts the tiny features of these miniatures. Many otherwise clever designers ensure that their models have the requisite number of eyes, a nose and a mouth and more or less leave it at that. The features of a Sanderson 54mm. model, however, are those of a real individual.

Roman Slave Market

Aside from the dazzling array of pulchritude one sees in the slave girls themselves—and they are of a variety of nations—an examination of the unbelievably detailed hands—clearly defined sinews and knuckles, etc.—of every figure can only result in the belief that, in the 54 mm. line, they simply cannot be bettered. Nor need one remain confined by the slave market theme as many of the figures, the onlookers for example, would fit most admirably into any dioramic setting with an ancient context.

Novelty Girls

This series belongs strictly to the 'fun side' of the model soldier hobby, but this fact does not prevent their being of a very high standard, as befits any work by Cliff Sanderson. After all, why should your collection of model soldiers not have its 'pin-ups, as well as your real life barrack room or mess. Give your chaps a treat and add a 'Novelty Girl' to your collection.

LASSET MODELS

True craftsmen in the world of model soldier manufacture can be numbered on the fingers of one hand and of these the firm of Greenwood and Ball is fortunate to have John Tassell, whose Lasset models are in the forefront of the very many 54 mm. types now on the market. These superbly produced figurines are of a white metal which lends itself most admirably to the casting of the figures, whose lavish and minute detail has to be seen to be believed. All have been created only after the most painstaking and intensive research, and their authenticity and historical accuracy are as near perfect as scholarship will permit.

German Forces WWII

Politics apart, there is no doubt that the German armed forces of the Third Reich—the epoch which ended with World War II—produced a tremendous range of the most interesting material for the uniforms specialist and when one includes the military dress of some of the subject peoples—the various types of Cossack, for instance—the variety is endless. In this particular section of Lasset figures the ingenuity and skill of their originator are shown to the utmost advantage.

American War of Independence

One of the most fascinating periods of military history, although it has been up to the present relatively neglected by the model soldier enthusiast, is the American War of Independence. It is strange that this should be so, because militarily it has many interesting features, and from the sartorial point of view the range of uniforms is quite vast, going, if you like, from the impromptu garb of the backwoodsman with buckskin and long rifle right through the gamut to the buff and pipeclay of the Hessian grenadiers.

French Napoleonic

There can be no doubt that the soldiers of the Emperor Napoleon have a great fascination for collectors of military miniatures and of all the colourful and variegated units of the Grand Army there are none more impressive than the men of the Imperial Guard, whose Grenadiers form without doubt the archetypal soldiers of Napoleon. Their impressive and formidable appearance has been exactly captured in this Lasset series and the figures provide a most accurate and realistic picture of what went to make up the Old Guard, the famous 'grumblers'. Officers, pioneers, drummers and grenadiers are all individually animated and are depicted in the most meticulous detail of uniform and equipment, but what is even more important, one might feel, is the manner in which the facial characteristics have been portrayed by the designer.

Ancients

Once again John Tassel has created a remarkable series of figures which not only provide the collector and modeller with some exciting pieces but is beneficial to the student undertaking projects into this subject, already some thesis are being written with these figures as the bases for study and portrayal. There is a quality of substance, and in the appropriate cases, of massiveness about Lasset models which give a remarkable impression of purposefulness, while the definition of uniform and equipment details is a hundred per cent clear.

General Service Wagon 1914

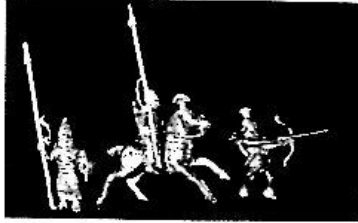

The Lassett version of the famous British Army General Service wagon of World War I is an outstanding piece of model construction. Its prototype in thousands saw service in practically every theatre of war and countless tons of supplies and food were carried. Our model is a most carefully produced replica in miniature of the original and it will form a magnificent centrepiece to any display featuring the British Army between 1914 and 1918.

GREENWOOD & BALL MODELS

The model soldier world owes a very considerable debt to the happy partnership of the late John Greenwood and Mrs. Nathaniel (nee Kathleen Ball), whose range of 54 mm. figures first appeared—to dazzle the then collector's world—well before the outbreak of World War II. Quite simply, they were a completely new concept in their field and their excellence of finish, their accuracy of uniform detail and the perfection of painting were of the same outstanding quality as they are today. Indeed, it is to their very great credit that nowadays, with competition by other craftsmen so keen, indeed so fierce, they still hold their undeniable position among the 'greats' of miniature soldiery. Some of the types available, the British Army Full Dress, the Clansmen and the Indian Army figures, have become near-legendary, so renowned are they throughout the world, and the photographs shown give but a feeble simulacrum of the actual figure.
